---	------------------	--------------

Sweet Basil (Bai Horapha)

It is used liberally as seasoning and sprigs of it are often added to platters of fresh raw vegetarian dishes. They have small deep green leaves with reddish-purple stems, and are used in red and green curries.

Flavor: Stronger than western basil with a distinctive lemony fragrance.

Galangal or Galanga (Kha)

Member of the ginger family that looks similar to fresh ginger but with a more translucent skin and a pinkish tinge / pale-yellow color. Larger and lighter colored than ginger. Used in curry pastes, stir-fries and soups. Avoid using too large a quantity or it may spoil the taste of the curry. Flavor: Delicate flavor and lemony taste.

Bird's eye chilies, (phrik kee noo)

Small thin, green or sometimes red are used in soups, some liquid or currylike dishes and sauces. They are extremely hot. Dried chili (phrik haeng) uses both large (red spur chilies) and small (bird's eye chilies) dried either in the sun or by smoking. Bright red chilies should be selected for the color they lend chili pastes.

Flavor: Extremely hot.

Kaffir Lime (Ma Krud)

Green fruits with knobby, dark skin, widely used in Thailand. The skin, juice and leaves are all used. The rind is often grated and added to food, while the fragrant leaves, rinsed and shredded, are added in chili soups or hot salad dishes to heighten their aromatic appeal. Flavor: Strong lime fragrance and flavor.

Mint (Sa-Ra-Naei)

Thai mint leaves are deep green and round, thin, hairless, and slightly wavy. The stem is dark red and is served fresh as an ingredient in spicy chopped meat salads, spicy salads and in sour and spicy fish soups. Flavor: Hot and fragrant (especially after being washed and chopped).
